QUESTION 1: HOW THE UITLANDER QUESTION THREATENED THE INDEPENDENCE OF THE TRANSVAAL IN THE 1880S

SOURCE 1A

The source below explains conditions in South Africa during the discovery of gold in the 1880s

Before the major gold reefs was discovered on the Witwatersrand in 1886, there were approximately only 600 white farmers in the region. However, the discovery sparked a mass migration of thousands of young men and within less than a year after the discovery approximately 7000 people were in the region. Approximately a decade after the discovery of gold on the Witwatersrand, 75 000 citizens from the United Kingdom immigrated to South Africa. This number also includes numerous other tented mining camps that sprung up in proximity to other discoveries and sources of small bodies of water. For example, in the Eastern side of the area small mines started developing, leading to the further development of areas such as Springs, Brakpan and Benoni. Similarly, in the Western parts of 'the Rand' mining towns such as Roodepoort, Krugersdorp and Randfontein developed. This gold rush led to an absolute influx of people including gold diggers, mining-capitalists and prospectors – leading to Johannesburg quickly becoming one of the youngest major cities in the world and the only major city that was not in close proximity to a large body of water.

The workers that flocked to the Witwatersrand were predominantly from rural areas and were classified as "temporary workers". They were regarded as "temporary workers" because the Political and Mining authorities of southern Africa created a labour system that focused on bringing cheaper labour from rural areas in southern Africa. These workers came from various areas all over Africa which included: areas within the South African borders, men from independent territories such as Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland and then men who were from other countries such as Mozambique, Angola, Zambia and Tanzania. This Migrant Labour System can be classified as a rotary system that meant that workers were employed for 18 month contracts and had no certainty of whether their contracts would be extended or not – hence why they were referred to as temporary workers. After their 18 months expired, these workers had to migrate back to their areas of origin. These workers were convinced to take mining jobs because they had to pay "hut tax" that was enforced in 1884 and at this time mining was the most 'stable' source of income as the rural lands were relatively unproductive compared to other areas that were reserved for the 'Europeans'.

The source below is an extract: The Uitlander Movement in the South African Republic before the Jameson Raid by C Webb, the University of the Witwatersrand, 1952. It highlights tensions that erupted after the discovery of gold.

It was at Barberton that the first signs of conflict between the new population and the old appeared. In 1886, on the occasion of a visit by President Kruger to De Kaap, the diggers presented him with an address in which requests were put forward for reduction of taxation, for road and bridge construction, and for remedy of the position in which the new community had no separate representation in the Volksraad.

The following year saw an intensification of the agitation (dissatisfaction) thus begun. In the early part of the year, public meetings were held, and petitions were forwarded to government on the subjects of political representation and a reduction of customs dues. To the first request, the Government responded with a proclamation, creating the Barberton Gold-fields and those of the Witwatersrand electoral constituencies. But despite this concession, the agitation continued. The request for representation having been met, its place was immediately taken by demands for extension of the franchise. At the beginning of December, a meeting was held and resolutions passed urging that the franchise qualifications should be reduced.

Under the existing franchise law, the qualifications required of new-comers, in order for them to obtain the vote, were a five years' residence, the taking of the oath of allegiance, and the payment of a naturalisation fee of £25. Except in the matter of the naturalisation fee, the regulations were very similar to those obtaining in such countries as Britain and the United States of America. By the burghers the agitation was accordingly regarded as foundationless, and the fear began to be expressed that the Uitlanders might be working with ulterior motives.

SOURCE 1C

The source below highlights Pres Paul Kruger's views about the position of the Uitlander in the Transvaal Republic in the late 1880s

In the debate which preceded the adoption of the law of 1894 further difficulties were placed in the way of immigrants' obtaining full citizenship. Naturalisation was made more difficult by a provision that applicants for naturalisation had to submit a declaration by a competent official to confirm that they did not have a sentence against them which precluded them from becoming citizens, and even more important, that children followed the status of their father, and if the father was unnaturalised they could not obtain citizenship even if they had been born in die Republic. Kruger supported the new requirements wholeheartedly and during the debate leading to the amended act used the false argument that citizenship was an inherited right and not a birth right. The result was that the law as approved contradicted not only itself but also the constitution, which stated that birth within the Republic was essential for obtaining citizenship. Kruger fully supported the stand taken by the conservative members in the Volksraad in spite of strong arguments to the contrary pointing out the danger of alienating the Uitlanders and making it almost impossible for them to become full citizens.

Kruger's thinking about full citizenship was rather simplistic. It made no provision for the possibility of Uitlanders' becoming loyal citizens of the Republic. While foreigners would have qualified for citizenship in most other countries after a few years they had to wait a full 14 years for the same privilege in the Republic. The right to vote for the members of the Second Volksraad certainly did not satisfy the Uitlanders, because the participation it gave them in political decision-making was negligible (unimportant).

The final blow to the Uitlanders' hope of becoming full citizens and sharing in decision-making was the resolution of the First Volksraad in 1894 and the resultant Act No. 3 of that year to exclude their sons who had been born in the Republic altogether from the franchise if the father was not naturalised. This provision in the law in the adoption of which Kruger played a central role is not mentioned in sources dealing with the franchise. The law disillusioned the Uitlanders to such an extent that the National Union which championed their cause became so militant that a peaceful settlement of the franchise question became impossible.

MEMORANDUM

This memorandum consists of 11 pages.

1. SOURCE-BASED QUESTIONS

1.1 The following cognitive levels were used to develop source-based questions:

Cognitive Levels	Historical skills	Weighting of questions
LEVEL 1	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Extract evidence from sources Selection and organisation of relevant information from sources Define historical concepts/terms 	40% (20)
LEVEL 2	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Interpretation of evidence from sources Explain information gathered from sources Analyse evidence from sources 	40% (20)
LEVEL 3	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Interpret and evaluate evidence from sources Engage with sources to determine its usefulness, reliability, bias and limitations Compare and contrast interpretations and perspectives presented in sources and draw independent conclusions 	20% (10)

1.2 The information below indicates how source-based questions are assessed:

- In the marking of source-based questions, credit needs to be given to any other valid and relevant viewpoints, arguments, evidence or examples.
- In the allocation of marks, emphasis should be placed on how the requirements of the question have been addressed.
- In the marking guideline, the requirements of the question (skills that need to be addressed) as well as the level of the question are indicated in italics.
- When assessing open-ended source-based questions, learners should be credited for any other relevant answers.
- Learners are expected to take a stance when answering 'to what extent' questions in order for any marks to be awarded.
- Assessment procedures for source-based questions
 - Use a tick (□) for each correct answer.
 - Pay attention to the mark scheme e.g. (2 x 2) which translates to two reasons and is given two marks each (□□□□); (1 x 2) which translates to one reason and is given two marks (□□).
 - If a question carries 4 marks then indicate by placing 4 ticks (□□□□).

Paragraph question

Paragraphs are to be assessed globally (holistically). Both the content and structure of the paragraph must be taken into account when awarding a mark. The following steps must be used when assessing a response to a paragraph question:

- Read the paragraph and place a bullet (.) at each point within the text where the candidate has used relevant evidence to address the question.
- Re-read the paragraph to evaluate the extent to which the candidate has been able to use relevant evidence to write a paragraph.

- At the end of the paragraph indicate the ticks (✓) that the candidate has been awarded for the paragraph; as well as the level (1,2, or 3) as indicated in the holistic rubric and a brief comment e.g.

		✓✓✓✓	Level 2

Used mostly relevant evidence to write a basic paragraph

- Count all the ticks for the source-based question and then write the mark on the bottom margin to the right, e.g.

32
50
- Ensure that the total mark is transferred accurately to the front/back cover of the answer script.

2. ESSAY QUESTIONS

2.1 The essay questions require candidates to:

- Be able to structure their argument in a logical and coherent manner. They need to select, organise and connect the relevant information so that they are able to present a reasonable sequence of facts or an effective argument to answer the question posed. It is essential that an essay has an introduction, a coherent and balanced body of evidence and a conclusion.

2.2 Marking of essay questions

- Markers must be aware that the content of the answer will be guided by the textbooks in use at the particular centre.
- Candidates may have any other relevant introduction and/or conclusion than those included in a specific essay marking guideline for a specific essay.
- When assessing open-ended source-based questions, learners should be credited for any other relevant answers.

2.3 Global assessment of the essay

The essay will be assessed holistically (globally). This approach requires the teacher to assess the essay as a whole, rather than assessing the main points of the essay separately. This approach encourages the learner to write an original argument by using relevant evidence to support the line of argument. The learner will not be required to simply regurgitate content (facts) in order to achieve a level 7 (high mark). This approach discourages learners from preparing essays and reproducing them without taking the specific requirements of the question into account. Holistic marking of the essay credits learners' opinions that are supported by evidence. Holistic assessment, unlike content-based marking, does not penalise language inadequacies as the emphasis is on the following:

- The learner's interpretation of the question
- The appropriate selection of factual evidence (relevant content selection)
- The construction of argument (planned, structured and has independent line of argument)

2.4 Assessment procedures of the essay

2.4.1 Keep the synopsis in mind when assessing the essay.

2.4.2 During the first reading of the essay ticks need to be awarded for a relevant introduction (which is indicated by a bullet in the marking guideline), the main aspects/body of the essay that sustains/defends the line of argument (which is indicated by bullets in the marking guideline) and a relevant conclusion (which is indicated by a bullet in the marking guideline).

For example in an essay where there are five (5) main points there could be about seven (7) ticks.

2.4.3 Keep the PEEL structure in mind when assessing an essay.

P	Point: The candidate introduces the essay by taking a line of argument/making a major point. Each paragraph should include a point that sustains the major point (line of argument) that was made in the introduction.
E	Explanation: The candidate should explain in more detail what the main point is all about and how it relates to the question posed (line of argument)
E	Example: The candidates should answer the question by selecting content that is relevant to the line of argument. Relevant examples should be given to sustain the line of argument.
L	Link: Candidates should ensure that the line of argument is sustained throughout the essay and is written coherently.

2.4.4 The following additional symbols can also be used:

- Introduction, main aspects and conclusion not properly contextualised

Λ

- Wrong statement

- Irrelevant statement

R

- Analysis

A✓

I✓

LOA ⇕

2.5 The matrix

2.5.1 Use of the matrix in the marking of essays

In the marking of essays, the criteria as provided in the matrix should be used. When assessing the essay note both the content and presentation. At the point of intersection of the content and presentation based on the seven competency levels, a mark should be awarded.

- (a) The first reading of the essay will be to determine to what extent the main aspects have been covered and to allocate the content level (on the matrix).

C	LEVEL 4

- (b) The second reading of the essay will relate to the level (on the matrix) of presentation.

C	LEVEL 4
P	LEVEL 3

- (c) Allocate an overall mark with the use of the matrix.

C	LEVEL 4	}26–27
