- 2.2 Refer to the extract showing Air Pollution and Development in Africa and answer the following question

Air Pollution and Development in Africa: Impacts on Health, the Economy and Human Capital.

For the last twenty years, Africa's growth has been accelerating. Life expectancy is increasing and deaths from communicable diseases are declining.

However, rapid urbanization and industrialization bring new challenges. Ambient air pollution driven by the burning of fossil fuels is already contributing to premature deaths including pneumonia, heart disease, stroke, diabetes, chronic lung disease, and lung cancer. In 2019, ambient air pollution was responsible for an estimated 383, 419 deaths across Africa. Meanwhile, though household air pollution is declining, it still accounts for 60% of all air pollution-related deaths (1.1 million) across Africa where polluting fuels such as charcoal and kerosene are prevalent.

QUESTION 2

2.1 Refer to the infographic showing South Africa's Agricultural Trade, (FIGURE 2.1) and answer the questions asked.

South African exports also faced non-tariff barriers in some key export markets, such as China for wool and the EU for citrus. China temporarily blocked South African wool in response to the outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in South Africa.

This was a misstep on China's part as there is already a framework for dealing with an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease to ensure the safety of wool exports to China. Notably, the outbreak was on cattle, not sheep, which should have provided further comfort about the safety of wool exports.

China lifted the ban after about four months. However, it had already had a notable financial impact on South African wool farmers and exporting businesses. China accounts for just over 70% of South Africa's wool exports.
