QUESTION 2: COLONIAL EXPANSION AFTER 1750 – CO-OPERATION AND CONFLICT IN THE HIGHVELD

There was a lot of conflict and co-operation in the Highveld between the British, Boers and the Basotho.

Discuss this statement with reference to how the British were successful in resolving the conflict. [50]

ADDENDUM

This source below focuses on Nongqawuse's prophecy to the Xhosa people. Nongqawuse, ... was a prophetess of the Great Xhosa cattle killing of 1856–1857.

Nongqawuse was an orphan living with her uncle Mhlakaza at the Gxarha River in independent Xhosa land ... One day in April 1856, she informed her household that she had encountered two stranger spirits from another world who told her that the entire nation would rise from the dead provided that the Xhosa slaughtered all their cattle and destroyed all their corn. The reason given was that people and animals alike had been defiled (spoiled) by witchcraft and that the living must cleanse themselves from all contamination (uncleanness) so that new people and pure cattle would rise.

Nongqawuse's prophecies were embraced (welcomed) by the overwhelming majority of the Xhosa people ... Even worse, they had seen their cattle herds decimated (killed) by an alien disease of bovine lung sickness, thus giving credence (trust) to the prophetic message that, "They have been wicked (evil) and everything belonging to them is therefore bad." A small minority of Xhosas, known as amagogotya (stingy ones) refused to slaughter their cattle and this refusal was used by Nongqawuse to rationalise (justify) the failure of the prophecy over a period of fifteen months (April 1856–June 1857).

This article outlines Ordinance 50 and its effects on the lives of the people in the Cape Colony.

At times called the 'Magna Carta of the Coloured people', this law (Ordinance 50) in 1828 gave 'Hottentots and other free persons of colour' the same rights as whites in the Cape Colony. When the Dutch settled at the Cape in 1652, the indigenous people they found in the area were Khoikhoi (previously called Hottentots). In law, these people were free ... Over time, many Khoikhoi lost their cattle and economic independence and became labourers for whites. Over time too, a growing group of people of mixed parentage (whites, Khoikhoi and slaves) was created and were joined by freed slaves ...

Simultaneously (at the same time) with the British occupation of the Cape in the 1790s, missionaries, fresh from Britain already in the throes of the antislavery movement, arrived to begin work with these very people. For the next several decades, they led the fight to alleviate (ease) discrimination and exploitation. Generally, the British colonial officials wanted to avoid trouble from the white settlers and were reluctant (doubtful) to take action ... However, missionaries still complained about abuse and the inequality suffered by the 'Coloured People'. ... Ordinance 50 was the result. It stated that henceforward, 'Hottentots and other free persons of colour' were to be subject to no laws to which whites were not also subject, including the 'vagrancy' practices and pass requirements. Freedom to move and freedom to own land were explicitly (clearly) decreed (declared). It therefore forbade (stopped) any racially discriminatory legislation and decreed (declared) equality before the law ...

SOURCE 1C

The following source focusses on the causes of the Great Trek. The Great Trek was a massive (big) movement – Great Journey or migration of the dissatisfied Afrikaners.

The Afrikaners (Boers and their servants) from the Cape Colony moved into the interior of South Africa to get a free safe haven, as they also hoped to establish a settlement of their own, free from British influence and interference ... They also moved away from the colonial administration of the British and those who trekked were semi-nomadic pastoralists who wanted large areas of land between 1830–1840s.

The movement of the Boers involved slightly over 14 000 people who wanted to establish settlements of their own ... When the British settled at the Cape, they initiated (started) Anglicisation and the area became a British colony. The Boers were forced to adopt English as an official language, which others resented and became very unhappy. When the British came to the Cape Colony, they favoured the Africans, introduced the black Circuit Courts where Africans could sue their Boer masters ... The British introduced the 50th Ordinance in 1828. The Ordinance favoured Africans to work for the people whom they voluntarily chose. The role of Christian missionaries led to the discontent (dissatisfaction) of the Boers who now moved dissatisfied with the triumph of the latter's work.

The slave trade and slavery were abolished at the Cape Colony in 1834 ... There was also land shortage as a result of over population, which forced the Boers to move away ... The Boers considered themselves a chosen race of God. They did not want to mix with the Africans.

SOURCE 1D

This photograph shows Nongquawuse with fellow prophetess, Nonkosi.

In 1856 a young Xhosa girl, Nongquawuse, claimed to have been contacted by two strangers who said that they had been sent from the ancestors with a message for the Xhosa people.

A staged picture of Nongquawuse two years after the cattle killing.

QUESTION 2

ESSAY WRITING

[Plan and construct an original argument based on relevant evidence using analytical and interpretative skills]

SYNOPSIS:

MAIN ASPECTS Candidates should include the following aspects in their response:

- Introduction: Candidates need to discuss the role played by the British to resolve the conflict in the Highveld.

ELABORATION:

- Moshoeshoe occupied the Highveld and the arrival of Boers and British changed the Basotho fortunes
- The conflict among the three nations was the land
- When the Boers arrived in the Highveld, Moshoeshoe let them use the land in the Caledon Valley
- At first the Basotho and Boers lived peacefully
- However, in the 1830s Basotho were under pressure from different groups living in that area
- The Boer population increased and demand for land was growing
- In 1843 Napier and Moshoeshoe signed a Treaty of Friendship
- Boers were unhappy, and to avoid conflict, and Moshoeshoe leased them land
- In 1850 Major Warden drew a new boundary favouring the Boers
- The White settlers received basically all the land they requested
- The Griquas the Tlokwa and the Barolong also wanted part of the land
- The Boers increased in numbers and needed more land
- Moshoeshoe realised that he was not a match with the Boers and sought protection from the British
- He made a treaty with the British and agreed on a border for the Sotho kingdom, which included the Caledon River valley
- Moshoeshoe gave up a piece of triangle of land between the Caledon and the Orange Rivers for White settlement
- Henry Warden, a British agent, granted four of Moshoeshoe's sub chiefs independence from his authority

- Warden's plan was to divide and rule
- The Warden Line destroyed the Basotho and Moshoe refused to accept the Warden Line
- Raids and stealing of cattle continued and Moshoeshoe was blamed
- This led to a war between Moshoeshoe and the British
- The British were defeated twice by the Basotho
- Bloemfontein Convention led to the independence of Orange Free State
- Area between Vaal and Orange Rivers was given to the Boers
- Moshoeshoe was not consulted and this caused further conflict
- Basotho raided cattle from Boer farmers and this led to a series of wars between the Boers and the Sotho
- The British supplied the Boers with arms and banned the sale of arms to the Basotho
- A second Sotho Boer war of 1865–1869 had disastrous results for Moshoeshoe
- He lost support and loyalty from his subordinate chiefs
- Moshoeshoe asked for British protection so as to keep the Basotho land
- In 1868 the Sotho kingdom was declared a British colony called Basotoland
- Moshoeshoe managed to save his kingdom from being taken over by the trekkers
- Any other relevant response

Conclusion: Candidates must tie up their argument with a relevant response.
